Humility.

Father, I scarcely dare to pray, So clear I see, now it is done, That I have wasted half my day, And left my work but just begun;

So clear I see that things I thought Were right or harmless were a sin; So clear I see that I have sought, Unconscious, selfish aim to win;

So clear I see that I have hurt The souls I might have helped to save, That I have slothful been, inert, Deaf to the calls thy leaders gave.

In outskirts of thy kingdom vast, Father, the humblest spot give me; Set me the lowest task thou hast, Let me repentant work for thee!

It is possible to cultivate the art of pleasing, until we shall be so educated in studying the moods of our fellows, that almost instinctively we shall take the right way to render ourselves agreeable to them, and if all the infinered for ence thus gained is diligently employed for good, it is a worthy employment. If however we are moved by personal vanity and ambition, such work is only suited for a very small mind. We are expected in all we do Ar Abbevil Ar Betton. mind. We are expected in all we do to seek the glory of God, and any effort to obtain personal popularity for any other end is beneath the dignity and should be beneath the notice of a Christian. For the Mastersaid, "Woe unto you when all men speak well of you," and we need not go far to seek for the reason, since you can only become generally popular by pandering to the taste of others, and losing your own individuality, and no godly man dare do that. You need only care for the opinion of sensible people, and these will only appreciate you, just as you manifest your own positive individuality. There are people, who are as changeable as weather vanes; they are influenced entirely by the compary in which they happen to be; they to seek the glory of God, and any efare influenced entirely by the company in which they happen to be; they have no positive opinions of their own, and their effort to please only excites the disgust of thoughtful persons. But we are sure that without sacrificing an iota of our own personality; we may profitably make efforts to please others and thus contribute to their happiness, and in doing so, will not only win their affection and regard, but will secure over them a large influence. If we are placed in company are influenced entirely by the compabut will secure over them a large influence. If we are placed in company with a morbid person, we can so dexterously lead the conversation from the depressing cause, as to talk on bright and joyful themes, and thus shed our own sunlight on their weary lives; and they will feel on parting shed our own sunlight on their weary lives; and they will feel on parting with us, as refreshed and hopeful, as if the cause of their trouble was being withdrawn. His home, too, was very small quarters for the many beds and cribs, to say nothing of the room required for the noting of the room required for the noise and fun which the merry nine made. But the father and mother managed very well, and the house was a nattern of meathers and local statements.

a pattern of neatness and order. One day there came a guest to the house. As they sat at dinner, the stranger, looking at the hungry child-dren about the table, said, compassionately, "Poor man, what a cross you have to bear!"

"1? A cross to bear?" asked the fa-ther, wonderingly; "what do you mean?"
"Nine children, seven boys at that."

replied the stranger, adding, bitterly, "I have but two, and each of them is a nail in my coffin."

"Mine are not," said the teacher, with prompt decision.
"How does that happen?" asked the
